Cleveland, (PRWEB) December 22, 2004 -- Andrew M. Colarik, PhD, an information security consultant, speaker and author on cyber terrorism and information warfare, today announced the formation of AndrewColarik.com -- a new service that will assist organizations in securing their information systems with effective policy advice, security audits, user education training, and the implementation of new security technology solutions. The new company is set to launch next month.

"One of my favorite pleasures in life is to share any knowledge or insights I have learned. Whether this is in regards to cyber terrorism and disaster planning, information security, systems development, protocol design, or a host of other organizational and business issues, it is a delight to discuss the latest issues facing businesses today" said Dr. Colarik. "In today's environment, we are all dependent on computer systems for our livelihoods in some form. By making my research and experiences available to organizations, and applying a systematic, common sense approach to securing an organization's information infrastructure, companies and stakeholders alike can benefit."

The services offered by AndrewColarik.com will be fee-based and will range from security consulting services to security research and development contract work. "Initially, establishing security policies, employee security education programs, and security audits will be the principle focus" added Dr. Colarik. "The primary goal of AndrewColarik.com is raising the awareness of information security issues and assisting individuals and organizations to be better prepared for the millions of hackers, crackers, cyber criminals, as well as cyber terrorists by recommending a wide range of solutions."

AndrewColarik.com will work with business, government, and manufacturing institutions as a business partner and advisor in assisting them with specific needs in securing their systems. Institutions will not be the only beneficiaries of this company. Dr. Colarik will be engaging media outlets such as talk radio and television to generate additional security awareness for the general public free of charge.
